 2. ROGER KOHLER: How do you view the role of the school principal, especially in light of the new evaluation process? What do you see as necessary for principals and their schools to succeed?
 3. ARLENE TOLOPKO: How important is communication between administration and teachers, administration and parents, and administration and students? What is your preferred normal mode of communication with all of the above? Verbal or written?
 4. CARL NETT: What has been your experience working with a school committee and how do you see the role of the superintendent as the chief executive officer reporting to a committee that is, in fact, a municipal legislature for schools, in leading the district?
 5. DEB FOGEL: What leadership skills would you use in selecting a principal?
 6. ALEX BOWMAN: How would you expect to be evaluated as the superintendent? On what measurements would you expect to be "graded" after one year, or at two years or at three years? When would be a fair point to evaluate your performance as superintendent?

7. PHIL MAGOVERN: As the new superintendent in our district, what would be your most critical long-range objective?
8. CAROL LOMBARDO: We all know about courageous leaders, but have you ever had to be a courageous follower in controversial times? Tell us about it.
9. ROGER KOHLER: Our district is a multi-million dollar operation and some people want us to run the district like a business. How do you respond to those people?
10. ARLENE TOLOPKO: In order of priority, which is most important in the hierarchy of the school? Administration, teachers, or students? Elaborate.
11. CARL NETT: Describe an incident where you disagreed with your committee. How was it settled?
12. ALEX BOWMAN: How do you judge the performance of the staff members who report to you? What characteristics do you see as distinguishing a better employee from one whose performance is simply average? What can you do to try to make superior staff out of average performers?
13. PHIL MAGOVERN: With regard to failures, tell us about some occasions when you did not succeed – or in something where you actually failed – and what it was and what you learned from it.
14. ALEX BOWMAN: What are your views about using student achievement data to evaluate educators?
15. CAROL LOMBARDO: What was the best idea you ever presented to your committee – the one you feel exemplifies the best in planning, policy, administrative action, etc.? Did the committee accept it? What persuaded them to move as they did, or what might you do to continue to work with them to accept your recommendation?
